This lecture aims to assess the intrinsic durability and sustainability of buildings of the Modern Movement and to define the potential to raise both through intervention.

The triangular relation between values, design, and technology will be explored, searching for the differences and similarities between the rather fragile built legacy of the Modern Movement and the more robust built legacy of a traditional nature.

Heritage as a vector for spatial development and preservation through development will be illustrated with a focus on interventions in the building envelope. There will be a focus on Dutch cases, enriched with international examples.
